

Friday the Witchteenth: A Night to Remember for the Wicked Witches of the Midwest

Every year, on the third Friday of October, the Wicked Witches of the Midwest gather for a night of revelry and mischief. This year, the event was held at the haunted Hotel Transylvania in Cedar Rapids, Iowa. The witches came from all over the Midwest, dressed in their finest costumes and ready to party.

The hotel was the perfect setting for the event. It's a grand old building with a long and storied history. It's said to be haunted by the ghost of a former owner, who was a witch herself. The witches loved exploring the hotel's dark corridors and secret passageways.

The party started in the hotel's grand ballroom. The witches danced and drank and feasted on a spread of delicious food. There was a live band playing music, and the witches danced until they were exhausted.

After the party, the witches gathered in the hotel's library for a seance. They wanted to contact the ghost of the former owner and ask her for advice. The seance was successful, and the witches were able to communicate with the ghost. She told them that she was happy to see them and that she was proud of them for keeping the tradition of witchcraft alive.

The witches left the hotel at dawn, feeling refreshed and renewed. They had had a wonderful night, and they couldn't wait to do it again next year.
