The Ruthless Sinners Motorcycle Club (MC) is a notorious outlaw motorcycle gang (OMG) with a long history of violence and criminal activity. Founded in California in the late 1960s, the Ruthless Sinners MC has since expanded its reach across the United States and into Canada and Europe. The gang is known for its distinctive logo, which features a skull wearing a motorcycle helmet with the words "Lynch Rule" emblazoned across it.

History

The Ruthless Sinners MC was founded in 1968 by a group of Vietnam War veterans in San Bernardino, California. The gang's original members were drawn from the ranks of the military, and they brought with them a culture of violence and disrespect for authority. The Ruthless Sinners MC quickly became involved in criminal activity, including drug trafficking, extortion, and assault.

In the 1970s, the Ruthless Sinners MC expanded its reach beyond California, establishing chapters in Arizona, Nevada, and Texas. The gang also began to develop a reputation for violence, and its members were involved in several high-profile shootings and assaults.

In the 1980s, the Ruthless Sinners MC continued to grow in size and power. The gang established chapters in Florida, Georgia, and North Carolina, and it became one of the largest OMGs in the United States. However, the gang also began to face increased pressure from law enforcement. In 1994, the federal government indicted 12 members of the Ruthless Sinners MC on racketeering charges. The trial resulted in several convictions, and the gang's membership declined.

In the 2000s, the Ruthless Sinners MC continued to operate, but its power and influence declined. The gang lost several chapters, and its membership decreased. However, the Ruthless Sinners MC remains a significant threat to law enforcement, and its members continue to be involved in criminal activity.
