Through a series of outrageous characters and hilarious situations, Rainbow dives into the challenges and triumphs of being gay in today's society. He tackles issues such as dating apps, hookup culture, and the search for love amidst the noise of social media.

The Power of Laughter and Music

Laughter is an integral part of "Playing with Myself." Rainbow's infectious energy and expert comedic timing keep the audience in stitches throughout the show. However, beneath the laughs lies a profound message of acceptance and resilience.

Rainbow's original songs, performed with an impressive vocal range and lively piano accompaniment, add another layer to the performance. They serve as both comedic relief and poignant reflections on the human experience. From the uproarious "Tinder Song" to the emotionally charged "Being Gay at Christmas," these musical interludes underscore Rainbow's talent as a songwriter and performer.

A Singular and Unforgettable Experience

"Playing with Myself" is a singular and unforgettable theatrical experience. Randy Rainbow's charisma, wit, and vulnerability create a deeply engaging and emotionally resonant performance. The show is not only a celebration of individuality but also a thought-provoking commentary on the complexities of modern life.

Critical Acclaim and Audience Reception

"Playing with Myself" has received widespread critical acclaim. The New York Times praised it as "a bold and brilliant tour de force" that "defies easy categorization." Variety called it "a triumph of wit, heart, and musicality."

Audiences have been equally enthusiastic. The show has consistently sold out venues and received standing ovations. Fans have lauded Rainbow's honesty, relatability, and the joy he brings to the stage.

A Show for Everyone

Despite its focus on LGBTQ+ experiences, "Playing with Myself" is a show that transcends labels and appeals to a wide audience. Rainbow's humor is universal, his characters relatable, and his message of acceptance resonates with all who have ever struggled with their own identity.

Randy Rainbow's "Playing with Myself" is a groundbreaking one-man show that combines laughter, music, and introspection. It is a celebration of individuality, a commentary on modern society, and a testament to the transformative power of performance. Whether you are a long-time Rainbow fan or a newcomer to his work, this show is an unforgettable experience that will leave you laughing, thinking, and perhaps even shedding a few tears.
